SCAMS AND HACKERS

As the crypto market continues to mature, there are a number of fraudulent actors in this space. From scams to hackers, here are a few things to protect yourself from losing your coins.

Scams

Scams have been around long before cryptocurrencies have been around. Where there is money, there is crime. Scams can take on many forms, but here are a few of the most common ones in the crypto space.

Be on the lookout for Scammers to:

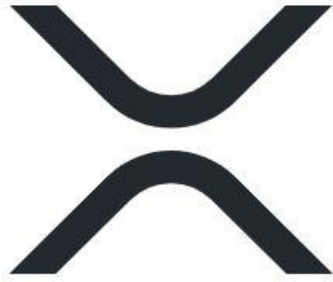

- Promise to send you double the number of coins you send them
- Pose as customer support asking for your information
- Pose as a well-known twitter or YouTube stars and engage you for information or money Becoming ISO 20022 is time consuming. The current list of cryptocurrencies include: XRP, XLM, QNT, ALGO, XDC, and ANA. These projects are ahead of other cryptos which are required by certain industries (i.e., banking).

Hackers

Hackers, on the other hand, try to obtain cryptocurrencies without the knowledge of the person or institution. One of the latest behaviors centers around SIM Swapping.

Here is how it works.

Hackers convince people's cellphone carriers to switch the phone numbers connected with their smartphone's SIM cards to SIM cards stored on their own smartphones. Doing so lets the fraudsters access the victims' text messages and voice calls, which helps them to reset the passwords of their victims and take over their cryptocurrency accounts.

RIPPLE (XRP)

The price of Ripple (XRP) moved sideways this past week. As of this email, XRP is trading at $.85 USD. This is up from $.81 USD from last week. No real news on the SEC lawsuit this week.
